14. GENERAL

- On the topic of increasing Club membership, Dwayne Malcolm noted that social media could assist with increasing awareness. He also suggested that we cast the net wider geographically to pull in more members and ideally host events and activities in the regions, specifically Port Elizabeth and Cape Town. He hoped that regional members would be keen to assist with hosting these.
- Genevieve Alberts tabled a proposal, first raised on social media by Louise Burgess Welsford from KZN, that the LRKC coordinate a multi-club initiative to introduce the "Pet Gundog" concept practiced in the UK. There is currently a large divide between active wing shooters participating in field trials and regular Retriever owners who want to explore their dogs' natural abilities but either don't have access to gundog training; or find the existing training groups clicky, intimidating and elitist; or who want to participate in tests (on dummies) but not field trials. There are very limited formal training programmes available in SA and most field trial participants form loose, informal training groups where people largely train each other, but these do not follow a formalized, benchmarked curriculum. She noted that there is no reason why Field Trials can't have formal training programmes offered by dog training clubs, similar to obedience, tracking trials, companion dog, working trials etc. Genevieve felt that if Field Trial training was more accessible, we might attract more interest in the sport and gain broader membership.
- Rho Hansen liked the idea, noting that some clubs do host tests, as a way of benchmarking skills, on an ad hoc basis, but acknowledged that this is not attracting new people and the same people attend the tests and the trials. Rho and Jane Pott agreed that the field trial fraternity needs to develop a proposal, with training content and testing requirements for each level (in line with 5C), much of which we can obtain from the Pet Gundog groups in the UK, and then approach FTLC to formalize. After some discussion it was agreed that Dwayne Malcolm, Jane Pott and Sharron Brown will approach the SA field trial clubs to form a multi-club committee to pursue the Pet Gundog concept.
